Publicly Accessible Summary: Aim for 200-400 words describing the aims and results of your project and their broader impact or relevance. Try to avoid jargon, or define it if you must use it. Think about how you would describe your research to a first-year undergraduate student or to a family member. Think about how your research might relate to or inform broader questions about political life or policy.

Introduction: A brief overview of your work – the broader project, your specific aims for the grant funds, what you accomplished, any significant changes to your aims or activities. About one paragraph.

The Grant Period:

Narrative: A detailed description of the work completed. Roughly 1-3 pages. If your work is project-based (vs. research-based) this section may be longer. You can include, for example, a list of events supported by the grant. You might include evaluations from your event, and/or comments from participants. If possible, please provide an estimate of the number of public “impressions” that your project generated. These could take the form of event participants, views of webpage, downloads, listeners, re-tweets/posts, or citations—anything that helps us report on how many people your work may have reached. We also encourage the inclusion of event or program materials or products in an appendix.

Budget Summary: Brief narrative account of spending. Table detailing expenditures and amounts. Receipts not required. Roughly 1 page.

Conclusion: Next steps for the project and broader implications/contributions of the work. About one paragraph.
